The assault on Pearl Harbor was a monumental tragedy, with over 2,400 Americans losing their lives and thousands more injured. The attack crippled the US Pacific Fleet, destroying or damaging battleships, cruisers, and other vessels, leaving a deep scar on the nation's psyche.

Haiku: A Poetic Tribute to Resilience

In the aftermath of the tragedy, the Japanese art form of haiku emerged as a powerful means of expression for those affected by the attack. Haiku, characterized by its brevity and poignant simplicity, allowed individuals to convey their emotions and reflect on the profound loss and sacrifice.

Haiku Exemplifying Resilience and Reflection

By Toshiko Koike, a survivor:

> Smoke rising slowly Through the bombed-out ships at dawn A new morning comes

By Raymond Calkins, a Pearl Harbor sailor:

> Battleships ablaze Death and chaos all around Still, we fought on

By John Pilger, a war correspondent:

> Pearl Harbor waters Forever stained with blood and tears Lessons still unlearned

These haikus not only capture the horrors of the attack but also the resilience of the human spirit in the face of adversity. Through their brevity, they force us to confront the stark realities of war and the fragility of our lives.
